DATE: 07/25/2014 – 07/31/2014

VENUE: UNIVERSITY OF SÃO PAULO, DEPARTMENT OF ECONOMICS, SÃO PAULO/SP, BRAZIL

NEW EXTENDED DEADLINE FOR SUBMISSION: March 15, 2014.

www.iwgts.fea.usp.br

In response to several potential participants' requests, we have extended the deadline for submissions to the IWGTS to March 15, 2014.

We would also like to inform that FAPESP – The State of São Paulo Research Foundation – has selected our event to host the Second São Paulo School of Advanced Sciences in Game Theory. Thanks to FAPESP's support, we will receive extra funds to cover the travel expenses and partial hotel expenses of selected graduate students and junior PhDs (who finished their PhD within the past three years) who commit to attend the mini-courses and to participate in the entire workshop and whose research projects have been successfully selected by the selection committee. The funds will benefit up to 50 Brazilian citizens as well as up to 50 foreign participants.

Furthermore, we will also be able to partially support a number of participants who have a paper or research project selected for presentation at the workshop, on a need base, among those presenting their papers or research projects and willing to participate in the whole event.

Therefore, in order to apply for funds you need to have either a research project or a paper accepted for presentation in the workshop.

If you wish to submit a paper, please create your own submission account at the workshop's site at <http://www.iwgts.fea.usp.br/> first, and then complete your submission by uploading your paper by March 15, 2014.

If you wish to submit a research project for FAPESP financial support as a graduate student or a junior PhD, please create your own submission account at the workshop's site at <http://www.iwgts.fea.usp.br/> first, and then complete your submission by uploading the documents a) to e) below, by March 15, 2014.

a) Motivation letter, a personal statement specifying the mini-courses you want to attend, explaining the importance of these courses for your research project and stating your affiliation (the institution you are at).

A successful candidate must participate in the whole event and must attend 4 mini-courses among the seven ones, organized in the following 4 groups: 1-Market Design; 2- Cooperative games or Clubs; 3-Information Theory or Stochastic Games; 4 – Social Choice or Introduction to Auction.

b) Recommendation letter by your academic advisor, stating your expected graduation date, if you are a graduate student. Otherwise, if you are a junior PhD, the recommendation letter should be written by a former professor of yours and should indicate the conclusion date of your graduate course.

c) A brief one-page-long description of the research project that you are developing, specifying in which topic(s) of game theory the project fits. This document must be signed by you and by your recommendation letter's author.

d) Curriculum vitae emphasizing your scientific production, if any.

e) Updated transcript of your graduate courses.

All documents should be attached to your research project submission in pdf format.

The result of the research projects' selection will be made public by April 15, 2014. The selected research projects' participants are expected to present and discuss their projects in the poster session.

If you are not applying for FAPESP financial support as a graduate student or a junior PhD you may still submit a research project for a poster session presentation without uploading documents a) to e). Please check the Submission Rules page in our website (<http://www.iwgts.fea.usp.br/>) for more detailed information.

By the end of the workshop every participant will be asked to fill the event's evaluation form.
